DAILY TRIBUNE.
CITY OF CHICAGO.
FRIDAY MORNING, JANUARY 19, 1855.

THE NEW POST OFFICE LOCATION.

The deeds for the purchase of the property of Dearborn Alley for our new Post Office and Custom House Buildings, have been signed, and the United States Agent goes down to Springfield to-day, to get a bill passed through the Legislature, surrendering the right of Eminent Domain now vested in the State, to the United States, over and to the said property.

We call upon the Delegation from Cook county, in the Assembly, to see that this wrong is not consummated. We have yet to see the first man in Chicago who approves of this location for these buildings. To place them there will be an unwelcome thing to nine-tenths of our people. Let our members take care of our interests in this respect.

THE NEWS.

The Steamer Canada, from Liverpool on the 6th inst., arrived at Halifax on Wednesday evening. Her news is interesting. Breadstuffs were unchanged and the markets were very quiet.

A New York paper speaks of "the greatest Being Actress in America, Miss Julia Davenport." We suppose it refers to Miss Jean M. Davenport, as there is no actress the world knows of named Julia Davenport.

The letter from our Springfield correspondent published this morning, contains something of interest to the feminine portion of creation, besides being as interesting as usual to our political readers.

The Western part of Jersey county in this state, at the latest accounts was in a state of civil warfare, occasioned by the residents of the prairie driving their swine into the woods to feed upon the nuts and acorns which are there in abundance, against the wishes of the residents of that section. The parties are designated by each other with the soubriquets of "swamp dogs" and "prairie wolves." It appears that the hog-raisers of the prairies, owing to the scarcity and high price of corn on the one hand, and the almost unlimited amount of "mast" to be found in the woods, on the other, have thought it prudent, if not absolutely necessary, to avail themselves of the profusion spread out on every side by the God of nature. Many of the hog owners also own timber land, and though herdsmen are sent to take care of the stock, the migratory habits of the animal cannot well be restrained, and, as a consequence, they trespass on the rights of others. Already hogs have been shot, deaths reported, and the matter has been brought before the courts.

The Printer's Festival, on Wednesday night went off very pleasantly, and we give a very full report of the proceedings in to-day's paper.

The trial of Patrick Cunningham for the murder of Policeman Casper Lower, of this city, in September last, commenced at Waukegan, Lake County, on Tuesday, before the circuit court of that county, Judge E. S. Morris, presiding. We publish to-day the proceedings of the first and second days, and have made arrangements to publish the whole of the trial which is of much interest to our citizens. The Prosecution of the case is conducted by Messrs. Ballingall and Ward; the defence by Messrs. Harvey and Clarkson, appointed by the Court.

The California news by the Northern Light which arrived at New York on Monday is not of positive importance. The main points of her news have already been received and published here. The usual number of suicides, murders, and robberies had taken place. A woman somewhat known in the theatrical world as Eliza [illegible], and whose real name is Eliza [illegible], in a fit of jealousy stabbed Henry Kerrison, a member of the police of San Francisco and her lover, in such a severe manner as to render his death inevitable.

A great excitement was created in San Francisco occasioned by a stabbing affray, in which one of the parties was a well known former citizen of Michigan, Judge McCabe. He was stabbed by a young man named David B. Ackey. McCabe was formerly a Probate Judge in Michigan, and for several years a member of the Senate of that State. The particulars, as accurately as they could be obtained, are as follows: Ackey states that he has resided in California for some time, has labored hard and saved his earnings to send on for his wife and child to pay their expenses out to that country. His wife and daughter arrived at San Francisco in the Cortes on her last trip from Panama to San Francisco. Judge McCabe was passenger on the steamer at the same time, and, as he states, made improper overtures to his wife, which have been repeated since his arrival. At the request of his wife, Ackey removed from San Francisco to Marysville, and a few days ago Mrs. Ackey left her home at Marysville and came to this city. Ackey followed her, and yesterday succeeded in ascertaining that she was boarding at the What Cheer House. McCabe was also boarding there. Ackey upbraided his wife with infidelity, which she strenuously denied, stating that her love for her husband was unalterable, and freely confessed that McCabe had endeavored to induce her to swerve from the right path and break the vows plighted to her husband. Ackey, exasperated beyond control, on ascertaining these particulars from his wife, purchased a dirk knife, and on McCabe's making his appearance on the sidewalk in front of the What Cheer House, rushed out and made a pass at him, succeeding in inflicting a severe wound on the right wrist. McCabe fled across the street; at the door of [illegible] Bookstore, was overtaken by Ackey, who plunged his knife with such force into his back between the shoulder-blade and the back-bone, that the force of the blow shivered the handle. The wound, however, is not considered a serious one. It is probable that the weapon came in contact with a bone. Surgical aid was immediately obtained, his wounds dressed, and the man conveyed to the hospital. Ackey instantly surrendered himself up, calling out to the crowd that he was ready to be hung, but did not want to go to the station-house. It is said that McCabe denies having acted improperly towards Ackey's wife, and states that he never saw him before to his knowledge.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 17.

After reading the journal, and prayer, the Speaker appointed the following select committee.

On State Board of Equalization.—Messrs. Richmond, of Cook; Moulton, Greer, Beal and Allen of Williamson; all lawyers but Mr. R.

Mr. [illegible] offered a petition in relation to our currency, similar to the Chicago petition.

The bill concerning the Ferry privilege at Rock Island, again came up this morning, and, as amended, yesterday, passed to a third reading.

Mr. [illegible] from the Judiciary committee reported a bill to regulate Foreign Insurance Companies, and recommended its passage.

Mr. Higbee reported a bill allowing constables $1,50 per day, for service while attending upon Courts, on the order of the Sheriff.

Mr. Moulton reported back a bill to amend the ejectment law,—also to amend Chapter 79 R. Statutes, and recommended their passage.

The bill to settle the time when the minority of females shall cease, was reported by Mr. Morrison. The bill was finally amended so that they be allowed to convey real estate at the age of 21 years, and not sooner. It was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and will probably pass.

Mr. Richmond, of Cook, from committee on Banks and corporations, reported a bill to provide for the burial of the dead occurring on the Railroads and other vehicles carrying passengers and, after a first and second reading, moved to refer it to committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Bowles offered a bill to promote general education.

Also, a bill to amend chapter 106 of R. Statutes, entitled "Warehouses," all of which were read and referred to appropriate committees.

The bill "to promote general education" provides that no public officer, or other person authorized "to solemnize the marriage ceremony shall unite in marriage any man and woman, either of whom is incapable of reading and writing. I do not suppose it will pass. Illinois may not yet be prepared for a step so far in advance, but it will take its day, not far distant.

Mr. Higbee, from same committee, reported back a bill with amendment, to incorporate La Salle Coal Mining Company. It was read a 3d time and passed.

The joint resolution of the Senate in reference to the [illegible] was read.

Mr. Allen, of Madison county, wished to be informed concerning the privileges now granted to foreigners, as he desired to vote understandingly. He finally concluded by offering an amendment that our Senators be further instructed to vote for a law to pay the passage of all the European paupers to this country out of the National treasury.

Mr. Preston moved to lay the amendment on the table, which was carried, ayes 42, nays 24. Every Nebraskaite voting in the affirmative, with several Republicans.

Mr. Beal offered an amendment resolving that the vote of our Senators in Congress for Senator Clayton's amendment to the Kansas Nebraska bill is condemned by this House. A motion to lay the amendment on the table was lost—Ayes 30, nays 41.

Resolved; That the vote of our Senators for Kansas the Nebraska bill, with Mr. Clayton's amendment meets the unqualified disapprobation of this House.

Mr. Baker of Madison, said he was opposed to the discussion of this and every question which was foreign to the business of this House. It was only brought forward to enable gentlemen to make Buncombe speeches, and he hoped they would not be gratified. After five minutes speaking in the same strain he concluded, when,

Mr. Grove of Peoria, said neither he nor his part of the House had sought to bring this matter up for debate. There were many members who appeared desirous to place themselves, in what he considered a degrading attitude before foreigners, and they alone were responsible. If the time of the House were occupied and important business put off, thereby they were more anxious to show these foreigners how much they loved them, and how much they were ready to do to promote their interests, and he was ready to let them gratify themselves to their hearts content.

For himself, he was not to be influenced by foreign votes. He would do what he thought was right, without regard to what his constituents might say.

Mr. Allen, of Williamson, disclaimed any participation in the attempt to bring the subject before the House. It came from a legitimate source—the Senate. The gentleman from Peoria was not guiltless of bringing foreign questions before the House, for he had been one of the principal parties in bringing forward the Nigger question. He hoped the question would be postponed.

Rev. J. P. Richmond, of Schuyler, was anxious for a postponement of the subject, and was rejoiced to hear that the gentleman from Peoria had expressed his hostility to the introduction of all subjects foreign to legitimate legislation. He was not prepared to say, however, that he would vote to lay these resolutions on the table when they came up.

Dr. Lyman of Rockford, said he hoped the resolution would not be postponed. He liked the resolutions as they came in, and he liked them better with the amendment. He liked the foreigners, and he liked the black man too.

Mr. Speaker Turner (Mr. Baker, of Madison in the Chair,) said the question was for making it the special order, so that all debate upon the merits of the main question would be out of order. He hoped the subject would be laid over, as he thought the resolutions very important. He then moved to make them the special order for next Wednesday, which was carried.

Mr. Richmond offered a resolution, "that the Committee on Education be requested to take into consideration the subject of compelling vagrant children, between the age of five and fifteen years (who are without employment and apparent control by their parents or others,) to be placed in our public schools, in all the cities in the State of 5000 inhabitants," and that the committee be required to report by bill or otherwise, which was adopted.

Mr. Waters offered a resolution that the committee on the judiciary be requested to report whether it would not be advisable for counties to elect Prosecuting Attorneys, instead of by districts as at present, which was adopted.

Mr. Speaker Turner moved that the House now take up the joint resolution of the Senate, for a temporary adjournment from Friday to Wednesday, next, and also to adjourn sine die on the 12th February. It was moved to amend by inserting Tuesday instead of Wednesday, and adopted, ayes 41, nays 21. The remaining resolution for final adjournment was then laid upon the table.

The House then adjourned till 2 p. m.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Third Annual Festival of the Chicago Typographical Union.

This magnificent affair, for such it truly was, took place on Wednesday, the 17th inst. It consisted, as announced, of a dinner at the Clarendon House, at 4 p. m., and a ball and supper at Metropolitan Hall in the evening.

The company at the dinner was very numerous, and comprised, besides the members of the Union and their friends, many ladies, and strangers from a distance. The work of demolition having come to an end, the President, Francis Belfoy, Esq., called the company to order, and the Secretary, R. V. Shurly, Esq., commenced the reading of the regular toasts, as follows:

1. The Memory of Benjamin Franklin: we honor him as a Patriot, a Philosopher and a man; we revere him as a Philanthropist and a Christian; and we claim him with pride as one of us—the brightest and noblest of all the illustrious men who, like him were Printers, Statesmen and Heroes.

Responded to by John A. Wright, Esq. His remarks were admirably appropriate to the occasion and the man. It was a principle that we become assimilated in character to that which we loved, admired, or worshipped. The printers had taken Franklin as their great exemplar. Had they chosen wisely? He answered that they had. Franklin was a safe model for imitation. He was eminent for his practicalness, and at the same time for his great versatility. He had been poor—had been compelled to struggle through difficulties—occupied a variety of positions—achieved the highest distinction, and in all his example might be safely followed. He concluded by offering as a toast:

2. The President of the United States. Music, "Hail Columbia."

3. The Memory of the Illustrious Dead of 1854.

Music. Responded to by John A. Thompson, Esq. Mr. Thompson's remarks were quite eloquent and affecting. He alluded, in touching terms, to the memory of the illustrious dead, who, in all grades and professions of life, have struggled for the welfare of their race—who, according to the abilities God had given them, have benefited mankind: whether through the pen—that instrument "mightier than the sword"—the tongue, or the printing press, mightier than all: who most have advanced the coming of that happy period when universal brotherhood shall stand confessed; who most have participated in the spread of the celestial faith, which irradiates with heavenly influence the home of the poor and the mind of the ignorant, regardless of flattering comments in the world's fictitious annals, and acting "the greater glory to reform the age."—Here the speaker referred to the long list of names, which he said, were still glowing upon the pages of history with one immortal beauty—among many others that of Lord Plunket, Chancellor of Ireland; Viscount Beresford, the hero of Albuera; the Marquis of Londonderry, the distinguished General Cathcart; the Marquis of Anglesea, who ranked in England next to Wellington, and lost his leg at Waterloo; Judge Thomas Noon Talfourd; Count Thibaudeau, the survivor of the convention that voted death to Louis 16; and many others who adorned the constellation of Europe's great men; and of many bright American names whom he was proud to mention upon this occasion, among which the benevolent Hebrew of New Orleans, Judah Touro. Thomas H. Perkins, the princely merchant of Boston; James Montgomery, the English poet, whom the world claims as its citizen; John Smith, the only distinguished man of his name, Patriarch of the Church of latter-day-Saints, and he—"doubtful?"—Thomas Ritchie, the most powerful political writer of the South; Rt. Rev. Bishop Wainright, of New York; Rev. Leonard Wood, D. D., of Andover, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Anne Royal, of Washington City, Fanny Forrester, Mrs. Anne Bayard, daughter of one, wife of one, and mother of two Senators of the United States, and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, widow of the distinguished statesman, who made Philosophy of politics and Freedom from Tyranny—this aged lady, one of the last of those venerable survivors of the "times that tried men's souls," was allowed to remain as a beacon upon the Temple of Liberty her husband had aided to erect. But, sir, the sorrow deepens as we remember the work of the Destroyer in our own loved Garden City during the past year. Many here have been his victims who, perhaps, never have received the title of "distinguished," yet who had their own circle of usefulness, and where there has been felt as greatly felt as when a "great man dies." To many seated at this festive board, the figures 1854 have indeed become sorrowful; but those departed kindred and friends have borne with the them Divine consolation—"To live in hearts they have left behind, is not to die." The machine shop, the Office and the Press, have all their cause for sorrow. The Bar, too, has lost some of its brightest ornaments.—The youthful [illegible], the friend of Collins and of Barre, while winning laurels to adorn his brow, was also weaving a garland for his grave. [illegible] D. Collins, than whom no man stood higher in the West in that noble profession—devoting the talent which God had given him to the honor and success and protection of his fellow creatures.

After an eloquent eulogy to the memory of S. Lisle Smith, Mr. Thompson concluded by a reference to Louis Kossuth, the Patriot, Statesman Hero, Editor, Governor, Philanthropist, Scholar, and Printer—Printer, did I say? yes, Printer, too, for when tyranny demolished his printing press, and outlawed all who were connected with it, Kossuth in private hand, and with his own hand printed and circulated that free sheet which brought joy to many a fireside.

I give therefore, as a sentiment—Louis Kossuth, the Hero, Patriot and Printer—the champion of freedom throughout the world.

4. The memory of Guttenberg, the Inventor, Faust the Promoter, and Scheffer the Improver of the Art of Printing. Music: Responded to by R. V. Shurly, Esq.

Mr. Shurly's remarks were of a historical character, and comprised a very interesting account of the history of printing. Although the discovery of printing was made as late as the 15th century, yet the precise time when, the person and the place whence the art received its birth, remains involved in a certain degree of mystery. Two reasons may be assigned for this. The imperfect state of printing while it remained in the possession of its inventor, and the necessity which the first printers labored under of being obliged to sell their books at the same high price as the Scribes sold their manuscripts.

A competition for the honor of the invention took place between the towns of Harrlem, Mentz, Strasburg and Venice, Coster of Harrlem, Guttemburg and others of Mentz, Guttemburg and Mentilius of Strasburg, and Janson of Venice.

But those who advocated the claims of Janson, relinquished the contest, for books were discovered to have been printed prior to Janson's time; and the majority are in favor of bestowing the honor of the invention upon John Guttemberg of Mentz.

The claims of Coster seems to be based upon the authority of the celebrated historian of Holland, Junius, or Adrian Young.

There is so much diversity of opinion as to the real inventors of the art, that it is difficulty to arrive at a positive conclusion. But it is admitted that the honor of perfecting the art, and of making it known, is justly due to the town of Mentz.

Mr. Shurly then spoke of Faust, and of his expedition to Paris, his arrest there, the suspicions that he was in league with the devil, and the origin of the story of the devil and Dr. Faustus.

The person who first discovered the method of casting the type, and completed the art, as it now remains, was Peter Schoeffer, the first servant of Guttemberg and Faust, who became son-in-law of the latter. These three kept the art a secret for some time, till at length it was divulged by the servants, whose assistance was required in the concern.

Many authors and critics have differed as to the true inventors of this great Art. But Guttemberg, Faust and Schoeffer are generally acknowledged in Germany as the first printers, and must be acknowledged by all, as they were the only ones, among the vocabulary claimants, who perfected the art to any degree. Hence their names deserve to be handed down from generation to generation, as being a blessing to all mankind.

Thus the art of Printing, in whatever light it is viewed, has deserved respect and attention. From the ingenuity of the contrivance, it has ever excited mechanical curiosity: from its intimate connection with learning, it has justly claimed historical notice; and from its extensive influence on morality, politics and religion, it is now become a subject of very important speculation.

5. The President of the Chicago Typographical Union.

A station of responsibility, requiring energy, tact, and perseverance. May he discharge his duties faithfully with honor both to himself and those over whom he presides, and may his life pass without a "blot," on its "proof-sheet," leaving a "good impression" behind.

F. Belfoy, Esq., the President responded in a neat and appropriate speech.

6. The Press: the lever that moves the world. Its Freedom a blessing; like the air we breath, if we have it not, we die.—Music: Marseilles Hymn. Responded to by J. K. C. [illegible], Esq., of the Democrat, as follows:

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

The Press is not a factitious element of human life and human activities; it is a living, breathing personification; a great fact in the moral world; a fact in the world mind; an extraordinary and almost miraculous fact in the world of matter.

Some, looking at the Press superficially, may consider it a mere vehicle of intelligence, recording the events of to-day, which are forgotten to-morrow—a sort of mirror which reflects the images of passing events, now the sunshine and then the shadow of life. After this fashion would the unlettered peasant view the surface of the ever-changing ocean, and know not but all he saw of its great and manifold purposes, was all it was created to perform. Its greatest uses; its most cosmopolitan, most permeating and most mysterious, are as nothing and worse than vanity to him. So it is with the Press: looked at by the common eye, it appears to be a very useful and accommodating instrument of human society; whereas scrutinized by the eye of faith and subjected to the touch of genius, its mission and the proportions of its gigantic form, rise far above the perishing things of time and space are lost in the clouds and shadows which border the unexplored regions of infinity.

If then the Press is not a mere factitious element of human life, but a part and parcel of its economy possessing functions important in the degree of the extent and character of its own nature and attributes, it must possess the two vital elements of all existence, viz: life and activity; and these elements must be in the continual effort to fulfil the great end for which they are created.

But what is the life of the Press, and how, in what form, and to what end does the activity of that life manifest itself, so as to produce the legitimate fruits of all faithful and true endeavor? These questions it is my object to answer in as concise a form as possible.

In the first place, the life of the Press is the idea of the soul, whether of the finite man that walks the earth, or of the Infinite God who makes that earth his footstool. Without this primary principle of life, the fair fabric of society, its literature, its art, its various economies would never have had an existence: with this idea as a primordial element, they spring into life and beauty, for as the light must be reflected upon the retina of the eye, in order to produce the image, so must the idea of the soul be reflected by words and words by the letters of living language. If it were not so, there would be no permanence to the loftiest creations of genius [illegible] forms in which the burning thoughts of a Shakespeare, a Dante, or a Milton could ultimate themselves, and thus remain as things of life forever.

The first idea of the human soul, then, contained within it, in miniature, as the acorn does the oak, not only oral language as its first expression, but written and printed language as the ultimate form of its life. If we study history of any language, or of all known languages, we will also see that they proceed from thoughts to expressions, from expressions to written or printed words; all having as it were, their birth, their life, their decay and death, but all, too, having their glorious resurrection; for though the idea which fires the soul of the poet must necessarily be rendered into the cold characters of written or printed language, as into a grave, it is only that from that lowest place of its descent—that culminating point in its existence, it may rise again with regenerated power and renewed habiliments to gladden the hearts of millions.—And this great work is accomplished by the agency of the Press. This regeneration is effected by this great triumph of modern science, more completely and effectually than by any other means heretofore known to the world. The pen long strove to accomplish the work, but strove in vain. The old writers traced the ideas of a Homer or a Virgil upon the parchment or the papyrus, and invoked the cunning Mercury to aid them in their endeavors to keep pace with the progress of things. But they were at length compelled to throw down the pen in despair. It was reserved for modern times to discover "the art preservative of all arts"—that art into which all the learning of the past might descend as the seed into the bosom of the earth, only to spring up and bud and blossom and bear fruit for the ages to come.

And this brings me to the peculiar life and functions of the Press. It fills in the mental and moral world, the self same position that the earth of our universe does in the physical. The sun may give forth heat and light, but that heat and light would be lost and dissipated in the wide realms of space, were it not for our mother earth which receives them into her bosom and returns them to meet the conscious of their parent, clad in all those beautiful forms of life which gladden the heart and delight the eye.

So it is with the Press: she opens her arms to receive every ennobling sentiment; every useful and worthy thought, and having clothed them in a proper garb, sends them forth ministering spirits upon the earth, with a mission of peace to every fireside, a whisper of hope, of encouragement or love to every beating heart.

Without her aid all that is good and glorious in the past and all that is worthy of preservation in the present, would be lost and dissipated: society would never advance beyond barbarism, while the Great Architect of the Universe would be compelled to pause in his work of moral and mental creation, of which, after all, the physical is but the simple preface; the plane upon which the grand temple of humanity is yet to be reared in all its transcendent proportions.

Thus it will be seen what a great function, a great life is that of the Press. There is nothing on earth that can exceed it, for it includes all; swallows up all. It is the second estate in the moral and mental world. The idea, or the life may be first, but the form of life—language—the Press—its continent; its earth, to which it must look for nourishment, and upon whose bosom it must repose, is the second. To complete the trinne, we have the fruits of the idea and the thought, as embodied—clothed upon—in the language of the Press, going forth like winged spirits, on their mission of life to every region where there is a human form to be perfected, or a human spirit to be saved.

And this brings me to the mission of the Press, and, in deed, must give you a foretaste of what that mission is. I have said that the primordial principle or life of the Press, sprung from the very soul of the Divinity, Himself. He, as the source of all, is the main spring and source of the life of the Press. Indeed, He did not disdain to designate His own Humanity by the title of "The Word made Flesh," as if to prefigure by this what a high position He assigned the great office of Truth-teaching, or the Press. He even makes that office the "second estate" in the realm of His own infinite life and carrying out the type. He tells us that until there was a resurrection of the Truth, the comforter could not come. And so, until it is possible that language can ultimate itself in its lowest form, in written and printed words, it is not possible that it can go forth on its mission, and, thoroughly and completely, for all time, fulfil that mission, to the perfecting of human society and human life. And as the great and infinite idea of human salvation, or regeneration, call it what you will, could not be brought into act without a development of the Infinite Truth in the visible world; so no idea of the human soul; no thought, however high or noble; no sentiment, however lofty; no inspiration, however heavenly, could have been so bodied forth as to present a tangible, living, and lasting form, without the aid of the Press to endow it with the most necessary attributes of life, existence and form, and stamp with these attributes on the records of time, forever.

But the mission of the Press, what is it? It is the mission of all Truth, all teaching. Being sent of God, it must account to God, and to His principles of eternal Truth for all the actions of its life. But the mission of all teachers being to improve, to regulate, to return again the lost wanderers in the paths of life; to prepare the world for a nobler and higher state; to so order human society and human endeavor, that they shall aim at perfection in all their efforts at advancement; this, also is the great and noble mission of the Press.

In fulfilling it, it fulfills a double duty; it not only unites man to man by the ties of common brotherhood; but it also unites man to God by the links of the chain of truth which it is ever so busily engaged in reforging; imperfectly it may be, clumsily and unartistically it may be, yet still the good work goes on and will continue to go on as long as we have a free Press to reflect the wishes of a free People.

And thus it is that the Press, having sprung from the Divinity, who gave us ideas and language as their exponent, which he gave not to the brutes that perish, has been following man in all ages, and recreating itself as each old language is swallowed up in some new one to which it had given birth. The Sanscrit, the Hebrew, the Latin, the Syriac, the Grecian, have all had their birth, their life, their decay, and death; still each has had its resurrection in some new and living form; until we have all, or nearly all, descending into the ductile, comprehensive and accommodating Anglo Saxon which pilfering from all, appears to swallow up all. This language is angular, abrupt, and square shouldered like the types with which we print it. The points and flourishes of the Hebrew; the grace and beauty of the Grecian, the resonance and commanding tone of the Latin are wanting in the Anglo Saxon. It seems made for practical men, and we hear it beats the brains out of your easy and graceful Spaniard or Mexican, as those who speak it are themselves, wont to do also. But do we not begin to see that this language, too, has had its birth, its life, and even now begins to exhibit some indications of decrepitude. Do not Phonography, Phonotypy, the Magnetic Telegraph indicate it? Who knows, but the Anglo Saxon tongue has reached its culminating print, and that unless it progresses with the material improvements going forward on every side it will also pass away like its predecessors, or at least, re-produce itself in a more perfect and beautiful form in adaptation to the progress of the world in every other department of life.

But not only language, but printing itself, it will be found, has passed through all the phases of ordinary existence. First it was born of a simple goose quill or a painted piece of wood; improvement followed: the scribes flourished the stilus or the pen, until in their vanity they imagined they had arrived at the utmost verge of improvement. But Faustus came to overthrow all their preconceived opinions. Improvement followed and is going on in the art to the present day, advancing with more rapid strides, as it approaches the goal to which it is tending. Why even some of my old printer friends will bear me out when I say that our modern improvements in printing appear to anticipate not only an almost inconceivable improvement in the art, but also in the language of which it is the conservator. Every implement in the art formerly was constructed on the principle that the square and the angle were the highest possible forms which could be used: there were the great clumsy presses, with the simple lever as the only means of economizing power: it took a giant to work them. Now we have our wheels and wheels within wheels: the form is progressing; the square and the angular motion give place to the circular and even spiral, while a child can handle the complicated machine, to so great a degree has man succeeded in subjecting the scientific world to his dominion.

Thus the Press, itself, the art of printing, has passed through a certain stage or stages of its existence. From the pen to the press, and from the days of Faust to our own, we may trace the years of its life, we may see its improvement; and who knows but that a printer, in the person of our own Franklin, may have inaugurated the second great revolution in the art of printing, when he tamed the lightnings of heaven and made them subservient to the behests of humanity?—Who knows, but his great discovery was the culminating point in the life of the art; the point from whence it has taken its upward flight in more thorough and complete consonance with the progressive spirit of the age and its great and manifold improvements. For my part, I look forward to the day when electricity will perform a highly important work in the progress of the art. I see in it the promise of the time when the vocation of writer and printer will be again declared one and inseparable; when the lightning of heaven will be the agent and instrument of human expression, and when the printer shall harness them to his press as he now does the grosser element of steam. Until that day arrive the Press shall not have fulfilled its mission, which is the union of art and science; of the skill which directs with the hand which executes; of labor and capital, and, I may add, of religion with life. Until that day arrives the chain of Homer, which he describes as reaching from the throne of God down through all ranks of created life and intelligence, shall not have been reforged. But it will be: and though the shallow may sneer and the materialist may doubt, still I believe that this is the great and exalted mission of the Press, as true as there is a Bible sent from God; as that He delivered the commandments of His law from out the smoke and fire of a Sinai, and printed them on tables of stone; as true as His own declaration, which is that His Word should not return unto him void, but accomplish that whereunto it is sent.

Did time permit me, I might show you how in this and even in monarchical countries, the Press is usurping the place heretofore occupied by Parliaments and Senates; how it is feared by the Queen on her throne and her minister in her Cabinet; how it is fast rising to a position from which its influence for good or evil is assuming extraordinary proportions, and extending itself into every sphere of human society.

The drama sinks into insignificance by the side of it, its sphere of usefulness is too limited. The clerical office appears shorn of half its authority and power by it; for the priest so often and generally more effectively, speaks from the Press as the pulpit. The stump orator becomes almost the mere mouth piece of the editor, who has stolen the most telling portion of his thunder, so that even the peasant recognizes the anecdotes and flashes of wit, for he had some time since read them in his village sheet by the light of his cottage fireside.

But if the mission of the Press be high, it behoves all connected with it that its aims and intentions should be high also. It should not demean itself to mere personal ends, or lend itself to personal ambition. It should tend to elevate rather than depress the moral tone of society; and above all it should take a broad and comprehensive view of human life, its wants and requirements, rather than the narrow one engendered by prejudice and passion and founded in error.

Our country is peculiarly adapted to sustain a free and independent press. It involves much, if at all, a distinct nationality, as a community of peoples, working out an experiment; laying the foundation for a great social structure, to complete which all are invited to aid, for the aid of all is necessary. The greater the number of component parts, the more perfect the form of the whole. The greater the diversity of idea, the more complete the edifice to which each adds a portion of material in his own way and after his own fashion. To unite perfect harmony of action with perfect liberty of thought, should be the great end and aim of the American press; for this must ever be the end and aim of all true religion; all true political and social economy, all noble, just and comprehensive ideas for the advancement of society and the amelioration of suffering and estranged humanity, no matter under what condition of color, creed or clime.

7. Education.—The step-stone to fame and fortune—the link which binds the people of the world as one brotherhood—the key of decorum and deportment, the guardian angel of the oppressed—the sire of judicious government, the honor of all, both high and low, and may it, like dew of heaven, fall alike upon the rich and the poor.

8. The Thirteen original States. Music—Yankee Doodle. Responded to by Mr. H. M. Flint, of the Daily Tribune.

Mr. Flint spoke of the history of the thirteen original States, of the men by whom they were settled, and spoke especially and in eulogistic terms of the Puritans of New England. Also of the distinguished men of the Revolution, among whom Benjamin Franklin was one. Of the martyrs of the Revolution; of the Congress at Philadelphia, of the formation of the Federal Constitution, and of what the thirteen original States have now become: an empire more extensive than that of Rome; a power second to no other on earth, in all the elements of real and substantial greatness.

9. The Mayor and Common Council of our city. Music. Responded to by U. P. Harris, Esq., City Treasurer, in a brief and pointed address.

10. Our Sister Unions of the United States.—Music. Responded to by Mr. James Campbell, as follows:

In response to the sentiment just read, I feel my inability to make such a reply as the subject demands. I will endeavor, briefly, in an offhand way, to respond, and should said response not come up to what you have a right to expect, attribute it to "an error of the head and not of the heart."

"Our Sister Unions!" There's magic in the words! Union of sentiment, thought and action should be the guiding star of every member of the brotherhood. We are a mighty force in the several States, and from the knowledge which our business necessarily teaches us, we can at any time resist encroachment upon our rights. Union,—when the whole interests of the craft are concerned—should be our only watch-word! Let private jealousies and bickerings be forgotten;—let us, to a man, come up to the work manfully, and my word for it, "our Sister Unions" will never have cause to complain of the "Chicago Typographical Union." Without disparagement to any other Union, I think I am not saying too much when I remark that our Union, as it now exists, presents a healthier condition than two-thirds of our Sister Unions,—that, as Chicago is the great thoroughfare for all travelling East or West, we are freer from rats than any other city of equal population in the Union. "Our Sister Unions" in a majority of the large cities, are also engaged in celebrating this, the birth-day of the immortal Franklin. They and we commemorate it as an event in the history of our country pregnant with untold benefits. Franklin! the architect of his own fame, did not forget the interests of his fellows. His whole life is a history that it were well we all should imitate. Unborn ages will bless him for the part he took in bringing to perfection the "Art of Printing." To Faust, Guttemberg and Schaeffer we also feel largely indebted for their discovery and progress of what the printing business was in their day termed, the "Black Art." It was supposed by those then living, that it was the work of the Devil. For a long time, their business was carried on secretly. At this day, were it not for types, we would be worse than heathens—groping our way in the dark, with but the intellect of the brute.

In conclusion, gentlemen, allow me to express the hope that "our Sister Unions" will spend this day with the same hilarity, "feast of reason and flow of soul" that we are now enjoying—keeping always in mind a "Union" for the sake of a National Union.

He gave in conclusion.

11. Our Sister Benevolent Societies of Chicago. Responded to by Geo. Anderson, Esq., of St. Andrews Society.

12. The Learned Professions. Responded to by Geo. W. Meeker, Esq., in a witty and humorous speech.

13. Woman—The paragon of man's existence, the [illegible] of his thoughts, the pearl of his soul, and the brightest diamond in the casket of his household; cheerful in adversity, assiduous and kind in illness, benevolent in distress, and untiring in the promotion of man's happiness. Music—Katy Darling.

C. C. Flint, Esq., of the Daily Tribune was called upon to respond, but said there was no need, on the present occasion, for a speech in response to this toast. The ladies were here, and their bright eyes can speak for themselves.

13. Our Guests. Mr. Wm. Stark, of Vermont, being present, responded to this toast in a brief and eloquent speech.

It being now nearly eight o'clock, the dinner party broke up, and most of the company repaired to Metropolitan Hall, where they were joined by a large number of ladies and gentlemen, and commenced. This was truly a magnificent affair. The company was very numerous, and such an array of beauty as was assembled, would be difficult to excel in our city. The music was by the Light Guard Band, and the dancing was capital. At twelve o'clock the company repaired to an adjoining apartment, where supper was prepared; and after supper, dancing was resumed, and kept up with spirit until four in the morning. It was, we believe, universally conceded that, taken altogether, it was one of the pleasantest parties of the season in every respect. We certainly found it so, and shall always look back upon it with pleasureable emotions.

TRIAL OF PATRICK CUNNINGHAM.

Indicted for the Murder of Casper Lower—Change of Venue from Cook County.

IN THE LAKE COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT, JANUARY TERM, 1855.

For the Defence, Harvey and Clarkson.

WAUKEGAN, Jan. 16th, 1855.

First Day was occupied in getting a jury, which was accomplished at 5 o'clock p. m. when, at the suggestion of the court, the usual opening was waived on both sides; Mr. Ballingall, for the People read the indictment to the jury, and proceeded with the case by calling

Jacob Rheim: Knows defendant; knew the deceased, Casper Lower; resides in Chicago; (Shown plat of Edina Place) says it is correct, and pointed out the several places there marked, being Cunningham's house and the place where Lower was killed; also gives distances from place of several witnesses to the place of killing.

Mr. Wachter sworn: Knows Cunningham; lives opposite; knew Casper Lower; heard of his death about three o'clock Monday afternoon; saw prisoner with a knife about half past twelve; saw him walk up and down talking to himself; also went in and out of the yard; had the knife in his right hand; could not tell whether he was drunk or not; he walked straight; saw people looking at him; I went to my front door and saw it.

Cross-Examined: Live in Edina Place; said nothing to him nor he to me; he was talking to himself; I left about five minutes to one o'clock for the depot. Court adjourned.

Second Day.—Jury called and answered to their names.

Mrs. Henning sworn: Resided in Chicago three years—live in Edina Place—knows defendant. Interpreter (Jacob Rheim) sworn—also Mr. Gensell as additional interpreter. Witness proceeds to say that she lives in Edina Place but no number to the house, defendant lived in the neighborhood where witness lives—defendant's house is close to her fence, cannot tell how many feet distant; knew Casper Lower a long time; cannot tell when she last saw Casper Lower alive; cannot remember the day when she saw him alive; heard he was dead some half hour after she saw him alive in her own house. Shortly before she saw Lower, she saw the defendant near her house; cannot recollect the hour she saw defendant; it might have been an hour and a half before she saw Lower, that she saw defendant near her house. Defence objected to introducing testimony as to what defendant was doing an hour and a half before the officer came after him.

Prosecution offered decision of Supreme Court in case of Walsh vs. McCarthy et. als. Objection overruled. As Casper Lower came to her house she did not see him do anything. After he left the house he went after defendant; saw them come out from the house of the defendant and went together towards the town. Witness showed plat, pointed out the direction they went; saw them go about a block together. On Monday, saw defendant come out of the house with a large knife and made an attempt to kill his father; saw the star on Lower's coat, at the time she saw defendant with the knife. His mother came out of the house and witness said to defendant "ain't you ashamed you big boy, to attempt to kill your mother and father." Has lived near the defendant's house a year and a half; saw him have the knife with a red handkerchief around it; put the knife in his pocket. Knife and handkerchief shown witness, and thinks it the same she saw in defendant's hand. Trouble commenced on Sunday. Defendant had a knife then and was sticking it in the fence or door.

Defence objected to this evidence as to what transpired on Sunday. Court ruled to admit the evidence which would be excluded from the jury unless the people connected it with the transactions of Monday. Witness continued—saw defendant have a knife on Sunday, which appeared to her like the same knife shown; saw defendant about four o'clock, Monday morning, he was making trouble at that time, going about the street in an angry or raging way, raving mad. When defendant and his father came out of the house defendant caught his father and wanted to stab him, his mother ran out and interfered to save his father, and the sister also ran out, and attempted to save the father. The mother called to witness to call a Watchman, witness replied she could not speak English enough.

There were people standing about but left on seeing the knife—they left because of the big knife (this answer was ruled out) they perhaps went to their houses, she don't know; saw a man stand by who afterwards brought the watchman, Lower, has seen the man here (Mr. [illegible]) who was brought forward and witness says she saw him and his boy on the side-walk and passed the defendant, but could not say whether he spoke to defendant or not—defendant went up and down near the fence and out again—defendant left about four o'clock in the morning, and returned in about half a hour, and remained about one hour and a half or two hours. It was after twelve o'clock that the trouble occurred with the father.

Cross-examined by defence.—Lives on the same side of the street with defendant; lots adjoin each other, are separated by a fence back of the house—house is some seven feet from the street—there is a fence in front also, the fence is three boards high—thinks about six feet high; there are three windows in front of my house and one on the side next to Cunningham's house—there are no windows in the rear of my house, have two rooms, front door is on Edina place, children sleep in the small room, witness sleeps in the large room, slept there on the night of the 17th September last, room has two windows in it fronting on Edina place; went to bed that night about ten o'clock; was not in defendant's house that day—defendant lay by the well in the yard asleep Sunday night when she went to bed, he was in the habit of being drunk on Sunday's and walked about, did not see him walking that night, saw him on his feet after dinner, he had the knife sticking into the window sash and door of his father's house; Cunningham's house stands back further than mine, can't tell how far—the well stands back behind Cunningham's house about four feet from the fence and about fifteen feet from Cunningham's house—witness stood in the front of her door and saw him sticking the knife in the window and door—don't know where he then went; he did not go into the house, witness swears on Sunday—she was afraid of him—went out in the evening to her son-in-law, and returned about ten o'clock with him—it was not very dark nor very light—defendant's house is nearer the city than mine, her son-in-law, lives on the back part of the same lot with her came in at the back door of the house, looked over the fence before I came into the house. My son and myself fastened the back door, did not go out again that night; heard the tannery bell which rung at four o'clock in the morning; got up when she heard the noise of defendant in the morning, on Monday; it was on Monday that the difficulty occurred between the defendant and his father and mother; can't tell how long after the difficulty that Lower came; he did not remain long in my house, he was a German, but spoke in English, knew him before and in his own house and spoke with him in German; has conversed with no one about the evidence she was to give; says she has often spoken about the matter but to whom she does not know; has not talked particularly only with regard to what she knew about the matter, has not talked with any person who wore a star about this matter. Cannot tell how many persons inquired of her about this matter, don't know Mr. Bradley late Sheriff of Chicago. [illegible] sworn as a witness on Monday last, asked Michael Wachter if he was coming to be a witness; talked with Mr. Rheim about getting pay on Saturday evening and on Sunday evening, did not speak to him before Saturday about this matter, he did not bring anybody to talk with me about this matter, nor went to the Court House to talk about this matter, he did not talk to me about this matter, have had no conversation with anybody in Waukegan about the matter, talked with witness Wachter this morning; through Mr. Wachter as interpreter I talked with Mr. Ballingall, Rheim had a paper in his hand when he came for me on Saturday evening and said I must be ready to come here on Monday at six o'clock, got no money from any one, came in the Rail, paid no fare nor board, had no money to pay, Rheim told me that all expenses would be paid.

Mrs. A. G. Downs sworn; Plat shown witness who pointed out her residence. My attention was first attracted to the matter in Sept. about the middle. It was on Monday, I was in the upper part of the house, windows were up, heard expressions "oh dear," looked out of window and saw Deft. fall, recognized Deft., saw officer strike him three blows and take a handkerchief around his hand and get into a waggon and drive off towards Clark st. It was on the corner of [illegible] and Jackson Street, near the middle of the street, Deft. fell into the gutter, did not see Deft. do anything to the officer, did not see the knife if Deft. had used it after the officer had struck him, did not see the star on officer, officer stood on the bank of the ditch, cant say how deep the ditch was, waggon drove off immediately, officer said to a man in a wood cart to take care of the prisoner, referring to the prisoner in the gutter, direct route from my house to court house is down Jackson to Clark st.

By Def.: Windows front South, don't know the width of the street, window was open, was reading when I heard the "oh dear," cannot tell which made the expression, did not see man fall after I heard the word "oh dear," prisoner was facing South. Officer had a stick, did not hear a blow before the cry, officer had a cane, cannot tell in what position cane was held, officer struck Deft. three times, he was larger than the Deft., heard no words from officer when he struck, cannot tell how low the officer stooped when struck. Deft. did not make any effort to defend himself, he did not use any weapon, saw no weapon in the hands of either. Deft. fell between me and the officer, it was between half-past one and two o'clock in the afternoon.

Court here adjourned till 9 a. m.

LEAVES FRAGMENTS FROM A YOUNG WIFE'S DIARY.

Tomorrow has come—tomorrow has gone. What a gulf lies between that yesterday and its tomorrow! * * * * Louisa and I walked to the village—she very much against her will. "It was wrong, and foolish," she said; "one should not meddle with vice." And she looked prudent and stern. I tried to speak of the innocent child—of the poor dead mother; and the shadow of motherhood over my own soul taught me compassion towards both. At last, when Louisa was half angry, I said I would go, for I had a secret reason which she did not know. Thank heaven those words were put into my lips!

So, we went. My little beauty of a boy was not there, and I had the curiosity to approach the cottage where his grandmother lived. It stood in a garden, with a high hedge around. I heard a child's laugh, and could not forbear peeping through. There was my little favorite, held aloft in the arms of a man, who stood half-hidden behind a tree.

"He looks like a gentleman; perhaps it is the wretch of a father!" whispered Louisa. "Sister, we ought to come away." And she walked forward indignantly.

But I still stayed—still looked. Despite my horror of the crime, I felt a sort of attraction; it was some sign of grace in the man that he should at least acknowledge and show kindness to his child. And the miserable mother! I, a happy wife, could have wept to think of her. I wondered, did he think of her, too? He might not, though the boy laughed and chattered, lavishing on him all those pet diminutives which children make out of the sweet word "father," I did not hear this father answer by a single word.

Louisa came to hurry me away. "Listen," I said; "one moment, and I will go."

The little one had ceased chattering; the father put it down, and came forth from his covert. Heaven! it was my husband!

* * * * I think I should then have fallen down dead, save for one thing—I turned and met my sister's eyes. They were full of horror—indignation—pity. She, too, had seen.

Like lightning there flashed across me all the future; my father's wrath—the world's mockery—his shame.

I said—and I had strength to say it quite calmly—"Louisa, you have guessed our secret, but keep it—promise!"

She looked aghast—confounded.

"You see," I went on, and actually smiled, "you see I know all about it, and so there has been. It is—a friend's child."

May heaven forgive me for that lie I told; it was to save my husband's honor.

Day after day, week after week goes by, and yet I live—live, and living keep the horrible secret in my soul. It must remain there buried for ever now.

It so chanced that after that hour I did not see my husband for some weeks. [illegible]

And the miserable mother! I, a happy wife, could have wept to think of her. I wondered, did he think of her, too? He might; for, though the boy laughed and chattered, lavishing on him all those pet diminutives which children make out of the sweet word "father," I did not hear this father answer by a single word.

Like lightning there flashed across me all the future; my father's wrath—the world's mockery—his shame.

I said—and I had strength to say it quite calmly—"Louisa, you have guessed our secret, but keep it—promise!"

She looked aghast—confounded.

"You see," I went on, and actually smiled, "you see I know all about it, and so does Laurence. It is—a friend's child."

May heaven forgive me for that lie I told; it was to save my husband's honor.

Day after day, week after week goes by, and yet I live—live, and living keep the horrible secret in my soul. It must remain there buried for ever now.

It so chanced that after that hour I did not see my husband for some weeks. Louisa and I were hastily summoned home. So I had time to think what I was to do.

I knew all now—all the mystery of his fits of gloom—his secret sufferings. It was remorse—perpetual remorse. No marvel! And for a moment my stern heart said "Let it be so!" I, too, was wronged. Why did he marry me, and hide all this? Oh vile! Oh cruel! Then the light broke on me: his long struggle against his love—his terror of winning mine. But he did love me: half maddening as I was I grasped at that. Whatever blackness was on the past, he loved me now—he had sworn it—"more than ever he loved woman."

I was yet young; I knew little of the wickedness of the world; but I had heard of that mad passion of a moment, which may seize on a heart not wholly vile, and afterwards a whole lifetime of remorse works but the expiation. Six years ago! he must have been but a mere boy. If he had thus erred in youth, I, who knew his nature, knew how awful must have been the repentance of his manhood. On any humble sinner I would have mercy—how much rather must I have mercy on my husband!

I had mercy. Some, stern in virtue, may condemn me; but God knoweth all.

He is—I believe it in my soul—he is a good man now, and striving more and more after good. I will help him—I will save him. Never shall he know that secret, which out of pride or bitterness might drive him back from virtue, or make him feel shame before me.

I took my resolution—I have fulfilled it. I have met him again, as a faithful wife should meet her husband; no word, no look, betrays, or shall betray, what I know. All our outward life goes on as before; his tenderness for me is constant—overflowing. But oh! the agony, worse than death, of knowing my idol fallen—that where I once worshipped, I can only pity, weep, and pray.

He told me yesterday he did not feel like the same man that he was before his marriage. He said I was his good angel: that through me he became calmer, happier every day. It was true; I read the change in his face. Oh! I read it too. Even his aged mother told me, with tears how much good I had done to Laurence. For this, thank God!

My husband! my husband! At times I could almost think this horror was some delirious dream, cast it all to the winds, and worship him as of old. I do feel, as I ought, deep tenderness—compassion. No, no! let me not deceive myself; I love him; in defiance of all I love him, and shall do evermore.

Sometimes his olden sufferings come over him, and then I, knowing the whole truth, feel my very soul moved within me. If he had only told me all; if I could only lay my heart open before him, with all its love and pardon! if he would only let me comfort him, and speak of hope, of heaven's mercy—of atonement even on earth. But I dare not—I dare not.

Since, from this silence which he has seen fit to keep, I must not share the struggle, but must stay afar off—then, like the prophet who knelt on the rock, supplicating for Israel in the battle, let my hands fall not, nor my prayer cease, until heaven sendeth the victory.

Nearer and nearer comes the hour which will be to me one of a double life, or of death. Sometimes, remembering all I have lately suffered, there comes to me a heavy foreboding. What if I so young, to whom one little year ago, life seemed an opening paradise—what if I should die—die and leave him, and he never know how deeply I have loved—how much I have forgiven?

Yes, he might know, and bitterly. Should Louisa tell—but I will prevent that.

In my husband's absence I have sat up half the night writing, that, in case of my death, he may be made acquainted with the whole truth, and hear it from me alone. I have poured out my sufferings—all my tenderness; I have implored him, for the love of heaven, for the love of me, that would in every way atone for the past, and lead for the future a righteous life;—that, after death, we may meet in joy evermore.

I have been to church with Laurence—for the last time, as I think. We knelt together, and took the sacrament. His face was grave, but peaceful. When we came home, we sat in our beautiful little rose garden; he, looking so content—even happy,—so tender over me—so full of hope for the future. How should this be, if he had on his soul that awful sin? All seemed a delusion of my own creating; I doubted even the evidence of my own senses. I longed to throw myself on his bosom, and tell him all.—But then for some inexplicable cause, the olden cloud came over him; I read in his face, or think I read the torturing remorse which at once repelled me from him, and yet drew me again, with a compassion that was almost stronger than love.

I thought I would try to say, in some passing way, words that, should I die, might afterwards comfort him, by telling him how his misery had wrung my heart, and how I did not scorn him, even for his sin.

"Laurence," I said, very softly, "I wish that you and I had known one another all our lives—from the time that we were little children."

"Oh! that we had! then I had been a better and happier man, my Adelaide!" was his answer.

"We will not talk of that. Please God, we may live a long and happy life together; but if not—"

He looked at me with fear. "What is that you say? Adelaide, you are not going to die? you whom I love, whom I have made happy, you who have no cause to die."

Oh, agony! he thought of one who had cause—to whom shame and misery death was better than life. Poor wretch! she, too, might have loved him. It was long, long ago. She is dead; and he—Oh! my husband! may God forgive me according as I pardon you!

REPORTED EXPRESSLY FOR THE CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

HALIFAX, Jan. 17.

The steamship Canada from Liverpool arrived this evening. The news, though interesting, possesses no new feature of importance.

The intelligence from the seat of war is unimportant, except that the allies had on the 28th ult., 300 guns in readiness to open fire upon Sevastopol, and after a 48 hours' bombardment, it was expected the place would be stormed from the south side.

Negotiations at Vienna had been further postponed 14 days, in order to give the Russian minister, Gortschakoff, an opportunity to communicate with his Government. Although peace was thought to be wholly improbable, it was not thought to be altogether impossible.

Commercial advices are essentially the same as previously received by the Baltic.

Breadstuffs unchanged but the markets were generally very quiet. Quotations almost nominal; the same as reported by the Baltic.

Provisions active at previous prices.

London money market unchanged, but consols have still further declined. Closed on Friday at 93 1-4 for money. American Stocks, State and federal are firm.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Jan 18.

The Know Nothings at a convention held yesterday, made the following nominations: Rev. John Moore for Governor, Elder Pike, of New Market, for Representative in Congress, from Dist. No. 1; Mason W. Tappan, of Bradford, from Dist. No. 2; A. H. Crogan, of Lebanon, from Dist. No. 3. Mr. Tappan is a prominent Free Soiler; Mr. Crogan is the editor of the "Granite State Whig," at Lebanon.

SECOND DISPATCH.

HALIFAX, Jan. 18.

The siege works at Sebastopol are progressing steadily and direct communication between the troops in the city and the Russian force at Balaklava has been nearly cut off.

Sorties are made almost every night by the Russians but on every occasion they have been repulsed with great loss.

The allies are strengthening their position, and will soon be able to take the offensive.

Their losses are more promptly and solidly repaired than the Russians'.

Notwithstanding the favorable turn in the affairs of the allies, and the near completion of the arrangements for storming the city, it is thought no important step will be taken by them until January 15th. In the meantime the armies are in good spirits and anxiously awaiting the signal for attack.

The conference at Vienna did not amount to much. The Russian ambassador was not intrusted with discretionary powers, and after receiving the views of England, France, and Austria in regard to the four points, he asked and obtained a delay of 14 days in order to confer with his government.

The Russian interpretation of the points does not differ materially from that of the allies, and there is a bare chance that subsequent negociations may lead to peace.

Hostilities will continue while Russia is taking time to consider the questions proposed.

Prussia continues disposed to join in the stipulation.

The news from Great Britain are singularly meagre. The London Times has created considerable excitement by advocating in the boldest terms the immediate removal of Lord Raglan from the command on the ground of incompetency.

The Times is also vigorously writing down the ministry and indicated the Marquis of Dalhousie, the present Governor General of India, as the only man capable of the position of Minister of war.

France.

The French Baltic fleet was ordered to reassemble at Brest.

Business was very active during the Christmas week in Paris.

Accounts from the industrial districts were most satisfactory.

The Spanish government is said to look very coldly on the English proposals to enlist soldiers for the war.

Russia.

An Imperial manifesto was issued on the 26th ult., calling on the nation to make every sacrifice for the war.

Austria.

Eight Austrian batteries of 8 guns each are to be supplied with gun cotton.

Germany.

The Prussian Government has forbidden export of horses, and has issued a notice calling attention to the law, forbidding Prussians to enlist in foreign army service.

Switzerland.

Mr. Fay has presented a draft of a treaty with the U. S. to the federal assembly. A private despatch dated, Berne, Dec. 27 says that the British charge d'affaire addressed an official demand to the federal council, for permission to enlist Swiss soldiers. The council is said to have replied by a formal refusal, stating that Switzerland would retain absolute neutrality in the great war. This is considered doubtful.

Italy.

The shock of an earthquake was felt throughout Piedmont at 3 o'clock in the morning of the 28th ult.

A riot broke out at Carrara, in consequence of which the city was pronounced in a state of siege, and all arms in the hands of the rioters, ordered to be delivered up within six hours after the notice.

The immaculate conception was celebrated, and the Neopolitans while it lasted, were placed under special benediction.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.

The Senate has private information that Gov. Baker of New Hampshire has tendered the seat in the U. S. Senate rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Norris, to John S. Wells. Messrs. Upham, White, Taylor, of Tenn., Wells and Purlar have been appointed a special committee to investigate the affairs of the Smithsonian Institute.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.

SENATE.—After some discussion, and the presentation of sundry amendments, a motion to lay the compensation bill on the table for the present was carried.

A motion to reconsider failed.

The Judicial Reform bill was then taken up and considered.

HOUSE.—Mr. Cobb (Ala.) made a personal explanation in relation to the Homestead bill, and as to the privilege of foreigners under that system.

Mr. Ball (O) asked if he was afraid "Sam" would be after him?

Mr. Cobb said he had no fear of him. He was not known in his district.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Pacific Railroad bill. Sundry amendments were offered and rejected, and pending a motion of Mr. Wheeler, (N Y) to strike out the enacting clause, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

SENATE.—A message was received from the President enclosing a communication from the Secretary of War, relative to a renewal of hostilities by the Indians. The Secretary recommends increase of the force to hold the Indians in check and represents the case as calling for prompt action. The President proposes calling into requisition the services of 3,000 volunteers to protect the overland travelers to the Pacific. Mr. Gwin hoped the Senate would carry out the suggestions of the President. The message and communication were referred to the committee on military affairs.

BOSTON, Jan. 18.

A legislative caucus of the friends of Gen. Wilson was held last evening and resulted in rather a stormy time. A motion was made to nominate Hon. I. G. Palfrey for U. S. Senator.

The opponents of Gen. Wilson also held a caucus, the proceedings of which are represented to have been spirited and harmonious.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18th.

The man who robbed the Jewelry Store of Tiffany & Co., was arrested, and the stolen property all recovered. His name is not given.

At our cattle market yesterday, the total offering of Beeves amount to 2,248, mostly of an inferior kind. Prices however, were well sustained, the range being $8 for inferior, to $11,50 for extra. Dressed Hogs mostly for packing 6 1-8 a 6 1-2, on foot 4 3-4 a 5 1-4; common sheep $3,25 a 4,00

The Board of Councilmen last evening passed a resolution in favor of appropriating $700 for a medal for Commodore Perry.

The ball for the benefit of the poor came off at the Academy of Music last night. It was a brilliant affair. It is estimated that as many as 1000 persons attended. A very large fund was realized.

The long-shore men now on a strike have had a meeting at which a compromise was strongly urged by some of their leaders. The proposition, however, is not in favor with the majority.

The Stevedores, Ship caulkers &c., are now on a strike in this city to prevent men who are willing to work for the reduced wages from doing so. They have badly beaten some members who are at work. Strong bodies of police are about the docks, and maintain order, but it is feared serious trouble will ensue, as hundreds are steady to work at the reduced rates.

The steamer Cahawba from New Orleans, via Havana, arrived last evening. No political news of importance. The reported recall of Concha was wholly false. No dates of the steamer Falcon and serious fears were entertained for her safety. Business at Havana was extremely dull. The new crop of sugar came in very slowly and was taken to Spain as soon as in the market.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 17.

Ford and Brother commission merchants, failed yesterday. Liabilities not known. Private advices from New Orleans report the failure of McMurdough & Co. and Fenn & Donoghue, Cotton dealers.

CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 18.

Considerable excitement, and no little amazement prevails here in political circles and among citizens generally, by the discovery that the Rev. John Moore nominated at Manchester by the Know-Nothings, for Governor, is ineligible for the office, the constitution of the State requiring a residence of seven years, while the reverend candidate moved here from Vermont within five years.

OSWEGO, Jan. 18.
